

QUESTIONS TO CONSIDER

When you stop and reflect, here are some questions to consider in this kind of situation:

1. What could go wrong when you meet a student after school, alone in a classroom?
2. Are there other appropriate places, times, or ways, to provide assistance to a student, that pose fewer risks?
3. Is there a school or school system policy that governs interactions with students outside regular school hours?
4. If there is no formal policy, what guidelines should you establish for giving assistance to your students outside regular school hours?
5. Does your approach allow for the same level of assistance to all your students (if they choose to accept it)?